The amount of information shared was incredible. If I was more prepared (with a slightly different background) I think I would have been able to take more from the lectures. I think it was much more valuable for the members of our Comms team.

Labs are excellent. One thing I recommend is having shorter, more frequent labs so as to make use of the practice for the next day. This will help complete the labs so as to get feedback within the same day and also relay questions.

The labs were pretty good when they worked. Unlike a previous training we took with another vendor which was very guided (type exactly this and do that, etc.), I like how the labs required some thought with instructions that provided helpful nudges in the right direction.

The course was very well-structured, and did not assume any in-depth knowledge besides what the pre-requisites courses listed. This made it very helpful to prepare, follow the material, and learn. The material was also updated and catered to our understanding and needs as we went along. For instance, I found it very useful that if a concept wasn't clear, there were cross-references to go back to fundamentals understanding, which is incorporated the next day immediately. This means the course material is not very rigid.
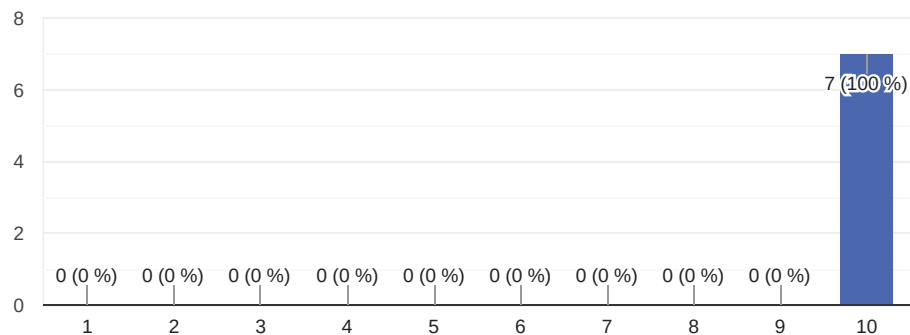

The course was well organized. I like how all the training materials are made available as open source. I tend to learn better by doing something, so I think spending a little more time with labs would be helpful, for future sessions. The information firehose was a little much at times, but overall manageable.

This was the first time the class was taught so there were some hiccups. Overall, the class was great.

Maxime is an excellent trainer who has deep technical knowledge and expertise, which made it easier for him to understand my questions and concerns and to answer them appropriately. He also has excellent communication skills and used the support of demos and diagrams when needed which also helped clarify the material. In addition, throughout the labs, he provided support on completing them as well as offering after-training support for things missed.

Maxime's knowledge about the subject matter is astounding and his expertise is undeniable. I want to applaud his ability to talk with the lecture material and not just read from it. On top of that, his English is fantastic and the information was clearly communicated.
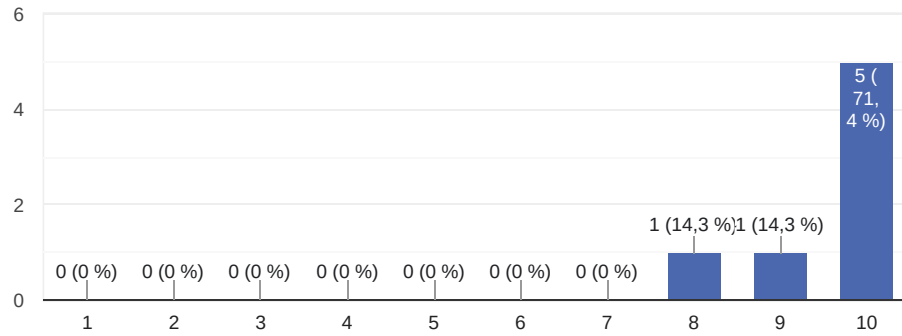

Maxime knew the content really well and could answer all the questions. You can tell he has great knowledge and passion for this topic.

As someone who is relatively new to Linux and the Linux Kernel, I found this course got my feet wet and also equipped me with a roadmap on where to go next in Networking. I can also immediately use the things I learned which I find extremely valuable.
