There could be even more of them, but I understand there's need to be a balance between slides and practical part.

Great Demos, wish we had dedicated time to do them all in person, but such is the nature of an online course.

Antonin was great, and clearly very knowledgeable as well as interested in making sure we all understood the material.

It would be better to have some practical hands-on session for attendees to get known of the knowledge, even enough with more costs, I still would like to have such sessions.

I had some background, so some topics were more of a refresh and extension which was great.

What part(s) of the course did you like most?

Combine demos with the theoretical content, especially with some small debugging session.

The practical demos as they had connected the theoretical knowledge with a real use-case. It was easier to try out some topics having some demo to follow.

The trainer can answer all the questions on the course.

The labs

What part(s) of the course did you like least?

The practical session is too short to cover everything.

There were no such parts I could point out.
